Teaching Awards Writing Workshop

When: Friday 16 March 2018 from 9.30 am to 12.30 pm

Where: Edith Cowan University, Mt Lawley Campus, Building 10 Room 10.307 & 10.308

The West Australian Network for Dissemination (WAND) invites you to attend the annual WAND Teaching Awards Writing Workshop. In keeping with WAND's aim of facilitating the enhancement Scholarship of Teaching and Learning (SoTL) in WA universities, this workshop is designed to share knowledge and enhance skills associated with writing applications for teaching awards with special reference to the Australian Awards for University Teaching (AAUT).

These awards recognise quality teaching practice and reward outstanding contributions to student learning. Recipients are acknowledged leaders in learning and teaching in their fields, able to contribute to systemic change in learning and teaching through ongoing knowledge sharing and dissemination.

All Western Australian universities seek to build capacity towards success at national level through local university awards. Accordingly, this workshop is open to those who aspire to teaching awards at all levels now or in the future.

Professor Lynne Hunt will lead this workshop in which participants will be empowered to find their own voice and encouraged to weave clear narratives about what they do to enhance students' learning. It will focus on use of evidence and the importance of explaining why you are doing what you are doing.

Lynne is Emeritus Professor, University of Southern Queensland. She has worked in educational leadership positions as Associate Dean (Teaching and Learning) at Edith Cowan University (ECU), Professor and Leader of the Teaching and Learning Development Group at Charles Darwin University (CDU), and Pro Vice-Chancellor (Learning and Teaching) at the University of Southern Queensland.

She received an Australian Executive Endeavour Award in 2009 to study quality assurance in Malaysian higher education and she is the recipient of three, university-level awards for teaching excellence. She won the 2002 Australian Award for University Teaching in the Social Science category and the 2002 Prime Minister's Award for Australian University Teacher of the Year.

Lynne is co-author of University Teaching in Focus (Routledge 2012) and The realities of change in higher education: Interventions to promote learning and teaching (Routledge 2006). She is currently a member of the Editorial Advisory Board, Journal of Teaching and Learning for Graduate Employability.
